You are invited to participate in a conference on the changes from DSM-IV to DSM-5, the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders, published in May 2013 by the American Psychiatric Association. This new manual is the product of a 12 year process that involved much effort at reevaluating the diagnostic criteria of psychiatric disorders across the developmental spectrum based on scientific data, clinical expertise and multiple field trials. The purpose of these revisions are to move the field forward by providing both the researcher and the clinician with valid and reliable diagnoses that will enhance communication, help with predicting the course of a mental condition, improve scientific evidence based controlled trials and allow for better allocation of resources. There will surely be revisions in the future but this is the consensus of state of psychiatric diagnoses at this time.

The focus of this conference is to bring together experts in the field who will present the changes in psychiatric diagnoses that often begin in childhood and adolescence. Not all of the changes from DSM-IV to DSM-5 will be covered but the emphasis will be on providing the scientific and clinical basis for the changes in the neurodevelopmental disorders including autism spectrum disorders, mood disorders including the new diagnosis of Disruptive Mood Dysregulation Disorder, ADHD, conduct disorders, anxiety disorders, trauma and stress related disorders, attenuated psychosis syndrome which is in the section of conditions that need further study, as well as eating and feeding disorders.

The conference will be of interest to clinicians, including child and adult psychiatrists, psychologists, social workers, case workers and HMO managers who wish to be updated in DSM-5. The new diagnostic criteria will be presented with clinical examples that will illustrate the changes. This conference is being organized by ISAS International Seminars and cosponsored by the Israel Association of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry. We look forward to spending an intensive two days of learning and sharing together.
